

Few breast cancer patients meet physical activity recommendations

A study of 1,735 breast cancer patients in North Carolina found that only 35% of them met the recommended amount of exercise needed to improve survival and quality of life. Nearly 60% reported doing less physical activity six months after receiving the cancer diagnosis. The findings appear in the journal Cancer. HealthDay News (6/9)